FOR LIBRARIANS, TEACHERS & PROGRAMS

BOOKS THAT TEACH KIDS TO THINK LIKE BUILDERS

An ongoing STEM series where kids notice problems, ask questions, test ideas and work as a team, written by a construction manager who works on the industrial projects behind everyday life.

WHO WILL BUILD TOMORROW?

BOOK 2 · AGES 9–12 · CHAPTER BOOK · FICTION · STEM

Four friends are invited to help design a playground ready for the future for a new community center. Along the way they learn how water, energy, materials, technology and people all connect, and that the future is built by people who keep asking questions.

- 8 chapters with a "Your Turn" question after the first seven
- 5 hands-on Future Builder Challenges using paper and household materials
- Glossary, plus pages for parents, caregivers and educators

Formats: Paperback $12.99 · Hardcover $18.99 · Kindle $6.99

GIRLS IN ENGINEERING & CONSTRUCTION

BOOK 1 · AGES 5–10 · FULL COLOR · CAREERS · STEM

Nya, Sophia, Kelsey and Lian discover civil, mechanical, safety and chemical process work, then grow up to lead the projects that shape communities. A story about curiosity, courage and seeing yourself in places you don't always see someone like you.

- "A Builder's Mindset" questions before the story starts
- An appendix of more than 25 careers in engineering, construction, skilled trades and leadership
- Companion coloring book for all ages

Formats: Paperback $15.50 · Kindle $6.99 · Coloring book $9.99

CLASSROOM FIT

- Connects to the NGSS engineering design progression (3-5-ETS1, MS-ETS1)*
- Design-challenge units, STEM career days, Engineers Week, accessibility and universal design
- Growth mindset: "I was wrong = I learned something"
- Speaking, listening and explaining ideas with evidence
